What is crypto currency

Cryptocurrency is a digital or virtual currency that uses cryptography for security, operates on a decentralized system, and has no central authority. It's designed to be a medium of exchange, like traditional currencies, but it exists only in the digital realm and is not issued by any government or bank. Cryptocurrency is a digital or virtual currency secured by cryptography, functioning as a decentralized medium of exchange. It allows for online payments, and sometimes physical transactions, using digital assets. Instead of being controlled by a central authority like a government or bank, cryptocurrency relies on a distributed ledger called a blockchain

Key Features of Cryptocurrency:

Decentralization:

Most cryptocurrencies operate without a central authority (like a bank or government), relying instead on a decentralized network of computers (nodes).

Blockchain Technology:

Every transaction is recorded on a public ledger called a blockchain, making it transparent and (mostly) immutable.

Security:

Cryptocurrencies use advanced cryptographic techniques to secure transactions and control the creation of new units.

Limited Supply:

Many cryptocurrencies (like Bitcoin) have a capped supply, which makes them resistant to inflation.

10 rupees will be deposited every day in multiples, but 300 rupees per month = 30 rupees commission, 330 rupees deposited, 3600 for 12 months = 360 interest

100 Rs 30day = 3000 + 300 Interest

$3300 * 12 - 36000 + 3600 =$

39600 = will be received in 12 months
